Sudan's government is said to have bombed areas in Blue Nile state, which is home to the Ingessana people (Radio Dabanga) by Radio Dabanga (2 min)

Despite the ongoing talks between Khartoum and Juba, Sudan's government is said to have bombed areas in Blue Nile state, which is home to the Ingessana people. Spokesperson for the Sudan Revolutionary Front (SRF) Abdelaziz Al-Hilu told Radio Dabanga that the Sudanese Armed Forces (SAF) dropped bombs on the villages of Kurmuk, Yabus and Bunjulo on Tuesday morning. Kurmuk is the capital of Kurmuk locality, which is home to the Ingessana people. Yabus is a village in Kurmuk locality, and Bunjulo is in Guba locality.

Al-Hilu is a journalist in South Sudan, who is a member of the Ingessana Revolutionary Council, and the former Governor of Blue Nile state. He is also the commander of the Blue Nile Sector of the Sudan People's Liberation Movement-North (SPLM-North).

Al-Hilu said: "The Sudanese government has violated the cessation of hostilities agreement that was signed in Addis Ababa on March 10, 2012."

He added that the bombing campaign has been ongoing since the beginning of the month, and that the SAF has also been using helicopter gunships.

Al-Hilu also said that the SAF has been using Antonov aircraft to drop bombs on civilian areas in Blue Nile state. These aircraft are not accurate, and the ordnance they drop often misses its targets.

Al-Hilu said: "The Sudanese government has been using its air force to bomb civilians in Blue Nile state. Their objective is to displace the civilian population, and to create a humanitarian crisis."

He added that the bombing campaign has also included the use of cluster munitions, which are banned by international law

Swedish authorities press charges against Turkey's influence, violations against its Kurdish cause (Nalan Necmi) September 5, 2021

The Nyasa Committee, a Swedish solidarity group, called Ankara to demonstrate that support for Syrian Kurdish groups remains unconditional, and that Turkey's influence in Sweden will not be tolerated.

Swedish authorities have pressed charges against the Nyasa Committee, a Swedish solidarity group, for its protest against Turkey's influence in Sweden and its violations against the Kurdish people. The protest took place on 28th September 2021 in front of the Swedish Parliament building in Stockholm.

Protesters gave out flyers and held up "no deals" with Ankara placards, a Kapak Dwelling spokesman. The cross-like appearance is deemed, the more delayed flowers are filled up to 8:00 and the 20, and the Kurdish Democratic Union Party (PYD) and the Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF).

The Nyasa Committee has been protesting against Turkey's influence in Sweden since the Turkish military launched its invasion of Syria's Afrin region in January 2018. The group has also been protesting against Turkey's violations against the Kurdish people in Syria and Turkey, as well as Turkey's occupation of Cyprus.

Two Britons Swiftly Jailed Under Anti-Terrorism Laws (The Times) By Tom Harper

Two British men have been jailed for terrorism offences after a trial that lasted just two days

The junta continued its predawn airstrikes on camps for internally displaced persons in Kayah State's Demoso Township early on Thursday, killing one man and injuring others.

JFM said the evidence of Htun Aung's direct involvement in war crimes and crimes against humanity is extensive. He has been sanctioned by the United States, United Kingdom, European Union and Canada.

It also pointed out that ASEAN strongly condemned the junta's aerial massacre in Pazi Gyi, but it is now honoring one of its main perpetrators.

In August, ASEAN held a counter-terrorism training exercise with junta officials in Naypyitaw.

Myanmar and international civil society organizations have repeatedly denounced ASEAN's defense cooperation with the junta.

Rohingya Genocide Ongoing After Six Years of Injustice (Progressive Voice) By Progressive Voice
September 4, 2023

"We stand here before the international community, the [International Criminal Court (ICC)], and the [International Court of Justice (ICJ)] to convey our disappointment in the delayed pursuit of justice." — Maung Sawyeddollah, founder of the Rohingya Students Network

In light of fresh atrocities committed by the Myanmar military since the 1 February 2021 attempted coup, 25 August marked the sixth anniversary of the Rohingya genocide committed by the same military in 2017. Yet, durable solutions for the Rohingya remain unresolved as long as the military junta is allowed to continue its terror campaign against the people of Myanmar with total impunity. Only until the military junta is held accountable for the crimes they committed and there is full restoration of civil and political rights of the Rohingya will a voluntary, safe, dignified, and sustainable return to their homeland, Myanmar, be assured.

The Rohingya genocide is rooted in successive military regimes employing the same pattern of slaughter, institutional and structural repression, and persecution through policies, laws, and a range of military campaigns. In 1977, one of the campaigns carried out by the ex-dictator General Ne Win, named "King Dragon Operation" of forced eviction and widespread brutality, rape, and murder, resulted in the exodus of over 280,000 Rohingya. Another terrorizing military campaign in 1992 drove as many as 250,000 Rohingya into Bangladesh, while a number of them were brutally killed and wounded. This was followed by another offensive, crimes against humanity, against the Rohingya in 2012 to drive them from their homes. Again, the "clearance operations" in 2017 forced over 800,000 Rohingya into Bangladesh. About 600,000 Rohingya remain in Rakhine State, Myanmar, confined to squalid camps and villages, living in apartheid-like conditions, being deprived of their rights and freedoms, and having their capacity to survive eroded.

The military's decades-long propaganda campaigns promoting anti-Muslim rhetorics, disinformation tactics, and promotion of ultra-nationalism have sowed hatred, phobia and discrimination against Muslim communities across Myanmar but particularly targeting the Rohingya. However, since the people's Spring Revolution in response to the military's attempted coup, the attitude of the people in Myanmar toward the Rohingya community — and other ethnic communities — has seen a positive shift with many more people standing in solidarity with the Rohingya community.

In remembrance of the Rohingya genocide on 25 August, 356 civil society organizations issued a joint statement reaffirming their solidarity with the Rohingya community in the pursuit of justice and accountability for victims and survivors, and calling for an end to impunity for grave crimes perpetrated by the Myanmar military. Compared to the 45 organizations that signed the 2021 statement, this year's number indicates broader support from communities across Myanmar, including Bamar and Rakhine civil society organizations, who have joined in solidarity with the Rohingya.

The National Unity Government (NUG) has taken an initial step in its policy position on the Rohingya in Rakhine State to replace the discriminatory 1982 Citizenship Law with a new law. While it has not yet been put into action, this is a good start to recognize the Rohingya as an integral part of Myanmar and as Myanmar nationals. Recently, Rohingya representative U Aung Kyaw Moe has been appointed deputy human rights minister to the NUG. While the inclusion of the Rohingya community in ongoing political processes of the Spring Revolution movement has been slow and yet to be comprehensive, it is positive that the movement's leading political forces such as the NUG have taken such concrete and significant steps to ensure inclusivity in decision-making. This type of action will lead it on a path to a better future for all communities in a new federal democratic Myanmar.

Rohingya themselves, as the rights holders, have organized themselves and amplified their voices to make sure they are heard and seen, and to have their rights recognized and respected. They are calling for inclusion, recognition, and changes and improvements in policy and attitude. Their voices remain strong across different channels and platforms, shaping and demanding their own future. This shows that there is always movement and that nothing is ever static. Wai Wai Nu, the founder of Women's Peace Network, called to end impunity in her speech to mark the day, saying, "Calling for an end to all forms of impunity in Burma, That also means genuinely apologizing for denying the Rohingya genocide." Another woman Rohingya human rights activist, Yasmin Ullah, also called on the international community, stating, "Lift up our community, provide comprehensive assistance." Rohingya youth activist Maung Sawyeddollah, founder of the Rohingya Students Network, spoke at a rally of thousands of Rohingya refugees in a Cox's Bazar camp, asserting their determination and demanding justice, "We are not victims; we are survivors demanding accountability." He expressed his disappointment in how slow the international justice mechanisms are, saying, "We stand here before the international community, the [International Criminal Court (ICC)], and the [International Court of Justice (ICJ)] to convey our disappointment in the delayed pursuit of justice." In a statement released by the European Rohingya Council, the group also urged the international community to renew its long-standing commitment to justice and accountability, which has stalled in holding the Myanmar military accountable.

The legal proceedings to find accountability that are currently underway — the lawsuit in the Argentinean Federal Court, the universal jurisdiction submissions in Germany and Turkey, the ongoing Gambia vs Myanmar case at the ICJ and the investigation by the ICC — are hopeful steps, but such international justice processes do not deter the Myanmar military from continuing its crimes against the Rohingya and other communities across Myanmar. Nonetheless, the Myanmar military can no longer sweep its own crimes under the carpet. The activism of the Rohingya community is advancing; what they need is tangible support to realize their aspirations to become an equal and integral part of Myanmar society.

Together with Rohingya brothers and sisters, the people of Myanmar are making efforts to hold the Myanmar military accountable for their crimes of genocide against the Rohingya and crimes against humanity and war crimes against other communities as well as taking necessary steps to build an inclusive federal democratic Myanmar. The ending of the ongoing genocide against the Rohingya in Rakhine and its non-repetition cannot be assured or guaranteed unless the genocidal Myanmar military is held accountable and the international community lives up to their promises of "never again" by lending all support necessary to achieve justice for the Rohingya community.

While such justice and accountability mechanisms are crucial and indispensable and need support, it is also equally important that the international community supports the building of a new political system in Myanmar. This system must guarantee the full restoration of Rohingya's civil, political, economic, and cultural rights including the right to citizenship and identity, and prevent further discrimination and persecution.

Northern Ireland legacy bill approved by MPs - but legal fight could be coming (Sky News)
Jennifer Scott
September 6, 2023

A controversial law that would effectively end prosecutions related to The Troubles has passed its final hurdle in the Commons - despite anger from all sides on the island of Ireland. MPs today approved the Northern Ireland Troubles (Legacy and Reconciliation) Bill, which will stop new cases and inquests being opened into killings on both sides of the conflict.

Instead, conditional amnesty will be offered to those who reveal information about the incidents to a new truth recovery body.

Inspired by Nelson Mandela's Truth and Reconciliation Commission in South Africa, the Independent Commission for Reconciliation and Information Recovery will also produce a historical record of what is known in relation to every death that occurred during the Troubles. Northern Ireland Secretary Chris Heaton-Harris said he believed the bill - which will now return to the Lords to be approved before becoming law - would "draw a line under the past", and it has received support from a number of veterans' organisations.

However, there is much wider criticism of the plan, with victims groups saying the law would protect the perpetrators of the killings, rather than offering justice. All the political parties in Northern Ireland are also united against the legislation, as well as the government in Dublin.

Irish foreign minister Micheal Martin told the Financial Times this week that ministers were seeking legal advice over whether the bill breaches Article 2 of the European Convention on Human Rights - "right to life" - meaning it could be challenged in the courts. If the Irish government launches a legal battle, it will only be the second time Dublin has taken the UK to court, with the last case over actions in Northern Ireland taking place 52 years ago. More than 3,500 people were killed during the Troubles, including over 1,000 members of the security forces.
